About Us

Our mission is to empower people everywhere to create the change they want to see. Our vision is a world where no one is powerless, and creating change is part of everyday life.

Change.org is the world’s largest platform for social change, with over 265 million users globally. Every day, millions of people use Change.org to start, sign, and support petitions on issues that matter to their lives and communities, creating powerful campaigns that drive real change.

Change.org is comprised of two organizations that enable us to maximize our impact around the world: a Public Benefit Corporation (PBC) and a charitable Foundation.

Change.org PBC is a mission-driven company that builds all of Change.org’s technology and supports users across North America, Europe, and Australia. All of the PBC’s revenue comes from our users, whose contributions enable us to offer free online tools and support for citizen-driven campaigns.

The Change.org Foundation is a non-profit organization that offers free grassroots training and support to users of the Change.org platform primarily in Latin America, Asia, and the Middle East. The Foundation is funded through a combination of small donations and philanthropic funds, and has an independent board, governance structure, finances, and administration to the PBC.

A Public Benefit Corporation (“PBC”) is a new form of legal status in the US for mission-driven companies. In traditional corporations, company officers and directors have a duty to maximize shareholder value, even where that conflicts with the company’s mission. In a PBC, by contrast, the company’s mission is legally enshrined in its Articles of Incorporation and directors are legally required to consider all stakeholders when making decisions – including users, staff, the environment, and the surrounding community.

Alongside our status as a PBC, we are a Certified B Corporation (a ‘B Corp’). B Corps use the power of business to solve social and environmental problems, and must satisfy a regular assessment by the non-profit B Lab – the B Impact Assessment (BIA) – that measures, verifies, and reports on corporate governance, worker benefits, community engagement, and environmental performance.

In 2017, we completed our fourth recertification cycle, increasing our overall score on the B Impact Assessment to 122 points (up from 96.5 in 2015). Our next B Impact Assessment will be reported in 2020, per B Lab guidelines. We are using this report to build upon the B Impact Assessment and offer further insight into the goals, operation, and impact of Change.org PBC.
Change.org is available in 12 languages, and has local teams in 18 countries.

Change.org PBC country teams:
Australia, Canada, France, Italy, Russia, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States

Change.org Foundation country teams:

Our Users

In 2018 Change.org grew to 265,786,771* users, and saw 603,903,062 signatures from all over the world.

Our users are as diverse as the countries in which we operate. They span all political, social, and economic perspectives, range from teenagers to senior citizens, and include experienced activists as well as millions of people entirely new to civic action. The one thing they have most in common is the belief that ordinary people should be able to have a voice on the issues that impact their lives.

Every week, more than 1 million new people join Change.org’s global audience of more than 265 million people, making Change.org a perpetual snapshot of what citizens around the world are working to change at any moment.

* includes 47 million users in countries without Change.org staff on the ground.

“I had signed a lot of petitions in Change.org, so I decided that it was time to create mine. I started it and I got an avalanche of signatures from all over Spain. There were so many people supporting me without even knowing me that I thought: “I can’t give up”. The signatures lifted my spirits so much.”

– Moumine Kone, petition starter from Spain
Our Impact Model

We believe that to create a world where no one is powerless, we need social and political systems that ensure people everywhere have voice on the issues that impact their lives.

Our strategy to help create more responsive systems of decision-making is to build an accessible platform through which we can do the following:

1. empower ordinary people to become powerful campaigners on the issues they care about
2. mobilize people to join together and contribute their voice, time, and money to advance these campaigns
3. engage decision-makers to compel them to respond to the public demand generated by each campaign

Our goal is to create a virtuous cycle of civic participation: as more people start campaigns on our platform, an ever-larger network of people join those campaigns, increasing the pressure on and incentives to decision-makers to respond to each campaign’s demands. This real-world impact, in turn, inspires even more people to start new campaigns, accelerating the virtuous cycle.

We believe this virtuous cycle can be transformative – making people more confident in the power of their own voice and more likely to participate in civic action, and making decision makers increasingly accountable to the public interest.

We are still early in our progress toward building the type of platform that will enable this virtuous cycle, but already see its potential. With more than 25,000 campaigns started each month, a global network of more than 265 million supporters, and thousands of responses from decision-makers worldwide, we see increasing evidence of the potential our platform has for transformative impact.
The virtuous cycle of civic participation

Empower

CHANGEMAKERS

We provide tools and support that allow people to easily start petitions, enabling anyone to become a powerful campaigner on the issues that matter most to them.

Engage

DECISION MAKERS

The scale of mobilization incentivizes decision makers to directly engage with the public and agree to the desired change.

Mobilize

SUPPORTERS

These petitions spread through compelling personal stories, and mobilize diverse people to contribute their voice, time, and money to campaigns.

PEOPLE-POWERED CHANGE

This cycle helps people recognize the power of their own voices and of collective action. As communities become more engaged, governments and companies become more accountable to the people whose lives they impact.
Victories

Every month, 25,000 petitions are launched on Change.org covering hundreds of different issue areas.

Every hour, one of these campaigns wins – changing a law, corporate practice, or a decision by someone with institutional power, and directly impacting the lives of thousands or millions of people.

In addition to the declared victories, in 2018 tens of thousands of campaigns made an impact by educating and influencing the public, compelling decision makers to address an issue they would have otherwise ignored, and changing millions of people’s sense of their own individual and collective agency.

To illustrate the breadth of campaigns on Change.org, what follows is a small selection of victories from 2018 across some of the most popular issue areas on our platform.
A 16-year-old girl from France, Zaynub Afinnih, launched a campaign in defense of Sudanese teenager Noura Hussein that turned into a global movement against forced marriage. Hussein had been sentenced to death for fatally stabbing her rapist – a man she was forced to marry as a child. More than 1.7 million supporters joined the campaign, which was covered by mainstream media worldwide more than 500 times, including in the BBC, The New York Times, and CNN.

The petition was delivered in-person to Sudanese embassies in 6 countries, and received an endorsement from the UN Secretary General. In response to this overwhelming pressure, Sudanese officials agreed to overturn her death sentence, replacing it with a lesser penalty. Zaynub celebrated the progress in a video to supporters, and has vowed to keep campaigning until Noura is safe and free.

16,203 campaigns were started to advance women’s rights in 2018 from people like Zaynub Afinnih. Here’s her campaign:

Health & Disabilities

19,965 campaigns on health and disabilities were started in 2018 from people like Matthew Smith. Here’s his campaign:

Brother of suicide victim convinces the UK government to make mental health history

24-year-old Matthew Smith, who lost his brother to suicide, started a petition to make the UK the first country in the world to make suicide prevention the responsibility of a specific government minister. Matthew partnered with suicide prevention organization Campaign Against Living Miserably (CALM) to mobilize nearly 400,000 supporters to make sure the message could not be ignored. The campaign grabbed media headlines through tactics that included installing 84 human-shaped sculptures on the edge of a London rooftop to represent the 84 people who die from suicide every week in the UK.

On World Mental Health Day, the British Government responded with an announcement that they would introduce a new minister for suicide prevention for the first time in history. Matthew recorded an inspiring video message to his supporters after the news was announced.

In late 2018, a drone captured aerial footage of eleven killer whales and 87 belugas confined in small chain link pens in Srednyaya Bay, in Russia’s Far East. The animals had been captured over the summer by four Russian firms that supply marine animals to aquariums. The authorities opened an investigation into the matter, as reports came in that the animals were severely distressed and in deteriorating health from captivity in confined conditions. A young local activist, seeking to gain media attention for the issue, launched a petition to close the “whale jail” and return the animals to the wild.

The petition was quickly translated into 7 languages and spread rapidly around the world, with more than 1.5 million people calling for the release of the animals. The campaign also attracted the attention of influencers including Leonardo DiCaprio, Pamela Anderson and the famous ocean explorer Jean-Michel Cousteau, who encouraged followers to sign the petition. International media added further fuel to the campaign, reporting on the building public outrage. After months of mounting pressure, Russian officials brought charges against the four companies responsible for the whale jail, and ordered that the animals be released into the wild.
Here are a few more examples of animal rights campaigns from 2018:

In the course of a 6th grade science project, Mya and Eve, two 11-year-old girls from Calgary, Canada, discovered that 1 million trees are cut down every year to provide the paper for 4 billion single-use Starbucks cups. Inspired to take action, they launched a #BetterCup campaign to encourage Starbucks to commit to using recyclable and reusable cups. Their campaign struck a chord, with 347,665 people signing in support and media coverage across Canada, including an interview on Canada’s biggest broadcast TV station, CBC.

Mya and Eve announced to supporters that they would be taking their petition to Seattle, for delivery ahead of Starbucks’ shareholder meeting. In response, less than 24 hours before the meeting, Starbucks announced a $10 million commitment to invest in the creation of a recyclable and compostable cup, and invited the girls to meet Starbucks leadership, including CEO Kevin Johnson. The next day, Mya and Eve attended the shareholder meeting in Seattle and asked the company, in front of thousands of shareholders: “Will you have reusable cups at this meeting next year?” The girls will be tracking Starbuck’s commitment and progress.

13,713 campaigns on environmental issues were started in 2018 from people like Eve and Mya. Here’s their campaign:
Here are a few more examples of campaigns on single use plastics from 2018:

10-year-old Brayden convinced Disney to phase out single-use plastics in its parks, hotels, and cruise ships.

A school class of 9 and 10-year-olds became a critical voice in securing a commitment from the UK Government to ban plastic straws.

An Italian school teacher led a movement that convinced the Environment Minister to make national commitments to reduce plastic waste.

A young woman from London led a successful campaign to get Pret A Manger to commit to the introduction of compostable cutlery.

A National Geographic subscriber convinced the magazine to stop mailing its product in plastic packaging.

Residents of a small town in Western Australia convinced the country’s largest supermarket chains to reduce plastic wrapping for fruits and vegetables.
The Yellow Vests movement in France, which grew into the most influential grassroots movement of the Macron Presidency, was sparked and driven by a Change.org campaign.

Priscillia Ludosky, a 32-year-old small business owner from a Paris suburb, started a petition to protest rises in fuel prices that made no provision to support the poorest French citizens living in areas without access to public transportation. The petition became the rallying point for public opposition to the fuel hike, growing to more than 1.2 million supporters. In November, this online movement spilled into the streets, driven by poor and middle-class workers who expanded their protest beyond fuel prices to a broader critique of cost of living, inequality, and the lack of public participation and transparency in government decision-making.

In response to growing unrest, the French government announced it would postpone all tax increases on fuel and gas, offer greater support for the poor, and launch a 3-month tour to gather citizens’ opinions on the future of the country’s policies on the environment, taxes, and civic participation. President Macron delivered a direct response to all petition supporters through his profile on Change.org, saying “You have been hit hard by rising fuel prices and have decided to react by signing this petition. I heard your message. I am answering you directly; you are right.”

The size and impact of this campaign put Change.org at the center of French politics. Political scientist Pierre Mathiot summed it up in leading newspaper Le Parisien with the conclusion that “Change.org has replaced the marches from Bastille to Nation.”

28,395 campaigns on economic fairness were started in 2018 from people like Priscillia Ludosky. Here’s her campaign:
Here are a few more examples of economic fairness campaigns from 2018:

A 17-year old student convinced FedEx to not lay off workers in Italy by gathering support from other students, the media, and the Pope.

Residents of a partially collapsed building convinced President Putin to intervene and agree to resettle them.

The sister of a disabled woman convinced a major bank to reverse its decision to hike their rent far beyond their ability to pay.

The Colombian government stepped back from plans to raise taxes on food staples in response to public mobilization opposing the move.

A veteran and hundreds of thousands of supporters convinced the Herefordshire County Council to find housing for a former SAS hero, saving him from homelessness.

48-year-old Andreas won his campaign to lower the monthly health insurance contributions for low-income, self-employed workers.
When child abuse survivor Purnima Govindarajulu traveled to her home state in India to file charges against her abuser in order to protect her younger cousins and nieces, she was horrified to find that the statute of limitations for reporting child abuse in India is only three years.

In response, Purnima started a petition calling for a reinterpretation of the law, gained the support of 380,000 signers, and captured the attention of national and international media – including The Times of India, Reuters, Buzzfeed News, and The BBC.

Because of the support of her campaign and with the help of our team in India, Purnima was able to meet with the Minister of Women and Child Development, who subsequently made a major change to government policy by announcing the removal of any time limit on cases pursued through the Prevention of Child Abuse Act, giving untold numbers of survivors the ability to pursue justice.

Funding Model

We are proudly funded through revenue that comes directly from our users, whose contributions keep our platform free, independent, and available to everyone.

There are two ways we fund our work: MEMBERSHIP and PROMOTED PETITIONS.

POWERING OUR PLATFORM THROUGH MEMBERSHIP

Our Membership program enables people to contribute monthly, with 100% of contributions used to fund the free support and tools we offer to help ordinary people win their campaigns every day. These are small, regular membership contributions from an incredible community of people who believe that every person should have a voice, and that civic participation is essential to creating responsive and accountable institutions.

We provide members with regular updates on the impact of their contributions through exclusive content.

By the end of 2018, more than 98,000 members were making monthly contributions

“Please continue like you are doing. You are fantastic, thanks with my heart for making real this revolution and for the everyday passion you put in your work! You are precious because you love justice and freedom! I’m with you!”

– Stefano, Change.org member from Italy
POWERING SPECIFIC CAMPAIGNS THROUGH PROMOTED PETITIONS

Change.org’s Promoted Petitions tool enables supporters of campaigns to contribute not only their voice, but also their money to support and grow the campaigns they join. After signing a petition, users can chip in money to promote that petition to more users on Change.org.

With more than 265 million users, Change.org represents the largest audience of people taking action on social issues worldwide, and users who promote petitions on our platform are able to raise immediate awareness about the campaigns they support.

During 2018, 1.6 million people promoted petitions on Change.org

We do not accept corporate advertisements, keeping Change.org entirely funded by and focused on our users.

In 2016 we shifted to a mission-aligned and user-driven funding model. Until 2016, our revenue was primarily driven by an advertising product for non-profit organizations called Sponsored Petitions. While this revenue model generated significant resources for our organization, its rate of growth slowed over time, and it caused us to focus too many resources on serving advertisers instead of serving our users. In 2016 we decided to discontinue this advertising product in order to focus on building tools that would enable our users to contribute money to increase the power of specific campaigns or the effectiveness of our platform as a whole.

We now have a deeply mission-aligned revenue model with a virtuous cycle, in which the more powerful campaigns that are launched on Change.org, the more revenue we generate from people who join and want to support these campaigns and our platform, which gives us more resources to invest in free tools and support to further increase the number of powerful campaigns.

The difference between our revenue and expenses in 2018 was covered by funds from our most recent investment round in 2017. This $30m+ investment round was led by Reid Hoffman, founder of LinkedIn, and joined by existing funders including Bill Gates, Evan Williams, and Sam Altman.
User Safety & Privacy

ONLINE SAFETY

We have a responsibility, as the world’s largest platform for social change, to create a safe environment where a plurality of views can be shared in a healthy way, and where even people who disagree on some issues can find common ground around others. We therefore take a strong stance against hate, discriminatory views and other abusive behaviour, and we have detailed policies and processes in place to ensure Change.org is a safe space for our users.

We have produced a comprehensive set of Community Guidelines which establish in clear language the behaviour we expect from our users.

We encourage our users to:

- Speak out on issues they want to change
- Mobilize others to support their cause
- Call on the relevant decision-makers to address the issue
- Engage in healthy debate with the wider Change.org community

At the same time, we are very clear that we will not tolerate:

- Hate speech
- Incitement to violence or the glorification of violence
- Impersonation of other people
- Violation of other people’s privacy
- Bullying
- Gratuitously graphic content
- Content that may be harmful to children
- Spam
- Illegal content

In order to identify and deal with any breach of our Community Guidelines, we empower our users to report inappropriate content via ‘report a policy violation’ buttons which identify any content (petitions and comments) that is not compliant with our Community Guidelines. We have a dedicated User Safety Team that acts quickly to respond to guideline breaches. All of our users agree before accessing the platform that they can be asked to remove content that is not compliant with Community Guidelines.

Our User Safety Team engages in open dialogue with petition starters whose content has been flagged to help them understand their responsibilities under our Community Guidelines. However, we do reserve the right to remove content and, in the event of serious breaches, restrict the access of a user to the platform.

We review our policies regularly to ensure they are adapted to the changing external environment and that the work of our User Safety Team reflects best practices.

As well as ensuring compliance with our Community Guidelines, our User Safety Team connects users to additional support services on issues such as domestic violence or suicide prevention where appropriate.
MISINFORMATION

We want to minimize the spread of demonstrably false information that is being presented as factual. Where issues are flagged we check the veracity of any claims and remove any content that is proven to be misleading to other users. We also use a banner system which flags content to our users which is a widely held conspiracy theory or difficult to disprove.

USER PRIVACY

Our users trust us with their personal data and we take our duty to protect it very seriously. We incorporate the protection of personal data into the design of all of our platform’s features and are fully compliant with data protection and privacy laws across the countries we operate in. We do not sell our users’ data to third parties.

We have a clearly articulated set of policies on our platform to ensure that our users are well-informed about how we use and look after their data. These policies explain:

- The information we collect
- How we use it
- How long we retain it
- Whom we share it with
- How users can change their privacy settings, ask for a record of the data we hold on them, or ask for all of their data to be erased from the platform

See https://www.change.org/policies/privacy#3 for more information.

Users can review their privacy options at any time via our Privacy Dashboard. This allows individual users to choose when Change.org will communicate with them and to opt out of emails altogether if they prefer. We honor all data access and deletion requests from our users.

Additionally we ensure our users are informed about our use of cookies on the platform. We provide users with information on:

- What a cookie is
- The type of cookies we use
- What their purpose is
- The point at which each cookie expires
- How the user can manage their cookie settings

Our goal is to keep our platform open, safe and empowering. To do that we have established and are committed to maintain rights and responsibilities which are robust enough to ensure our users are operating in a safe space but flexible enough to evolve with changing behaviors online.
The Change.org PBC team includes more than 150 technologists, movement-builders, and social entrepreneurs across 8 countries in North America and Europe, and the Change.org Foundation team includes more than 75 people supporting citizen campaigners across 10 countries in Latin America, the Middle East and Asia.

How We Work

Our goal is to make a positive impact in the world not only in what we do – by pursuing our mission of global empowerment – but also in how we run our organization.

“We believe that every organization has the opportunity to play an important role in positively impacting the lives of their staff, and the opportunity to adopt business practices that contribute to a more fair, inclusive, and equitable society.”

– Ben Rattray, Change.org CEO

We are proud of the culture and organization we have created – one committed to a workplace infused with purpose, growth, and connection. While it's difficult to capture the nature of this culture in writing, listed below is an outline of some of the programs that reflect and reinforce how we work together.

Staff Board. In addition to a governing Board of Directors, we have a Staff Board that was founded to increase transparency and offer a channel for staff input into key strategic decisions across the organization. Our Staff Board is elected by staff annually and works closely and regularly with our executive team.

Parental leave. We offer 18 weeks of parental leave at full pay for all new parents, regardless of gender. We're proud to say that full parental leave has been taken by 100% of staff, men and women, since we launched this program in 2013.

Pay Equity. We have established clear and consistent growth paths and salary bands for roles across the organization to provide transparency and reduce bias, and we conduct an annual review to ensure that people are paid fairly according to their performance and level. We believe the persistent gender pay gap around the world is a serious problem for fairness and social progress, and are proud to say that women are paid equally for equal work at Change.org.
Unlimited vacation. We believe that the amount of time off given to workers in many countries – particularly in the United States where the average is 2 weeks – is unhealthy, and we work to ensure that all staff have sufficient time throughout the year to rest and rejuvenate. In addition to a policy of unlimited vacation, we actively encourage people to actually take this time off – and estimate that the average staff member takes more than 4 weeks of holiday annually.

Diversity & Inclusion Council. We are committed to building a diverse team that represents the communities we serve, and to create a safe and supportive working environment where everyone has access to opportunity. To ensure we have a clear organization-wide vision and strategy for increasing diversity and improving inclusion at Change.org, we established a Diversity & Inclusion Council at the end of 2018 with a similar structure to our successful Staff Board. The Council is led by our Senior Director of People & Inclusion, and we are ramping up our investment both in our capacity for execution as well as the tracking of our progress in 2019.

Women Helping Others Achieve. The most popular group at Change.org is a co-mentorship and leadership-building group called Women Helping Others Achieve (WHOA), which uses a combination of skill sharing, networking, and other support to assist the professional growth of women across the organization.

The Change.org Fellowship. Launched in in 2018, The Change.org Fellowship was established to increase opportunities for aspiring product managers and engineers who are passionate about making a difference using technology, and who have roots in or deep connections with communities that have faced discrimination or marginalization in the tech sector. The program aims to create an entry point for people who might not otherwise get an equal shot at professional opportunities in tech.

Values Ambassadors. Each quarter our team celebrates the staff who best exemplify one or more of our seven organizational values – Embrace Openness, Think Big, Demand Excellence, Serve With Passion, Offer Solutions, Love and Understand, and Take Fun Seriously. Each of the people recognized receives either funds for professional development or an all-expenses paid trip to one of Change.org’s 18 country offices.

Change.university. We recently launched a peer-to-peer learning program called Change.university, which creates opportunity for staff to learn new skills, and to step up as teachers to help others with their professional growth. Examples of recent trainings include Time Management; Managing up and Stepping Up; and Management 101 for New Managers.
